

Neither feast nor famine for U.S. leisure travelers

Six in ten U.S. adults traveled for leisure in 2012, roughly even with the previous year. Travelers on average took 2.8 leisure trips, down slightly, and some travelers economized by shortening medium-length trips (4-6 nights) into quick weekend getaways.

SHERMAN, CT USA - Consumer spending may be on the rise, but when it comes to leisure travel, many Americans are still feeling frugal. According to a new report by travel industry research authority PhoCusWright, overall leisure travel incidence remained flat in the past year, and many of the U.S. adults who did manage to vacation took fewer and shorter trips. But while the average traveler may still not be feeling confident enough to splurge, there are signs that some vacationers are tentatively loosening the purse strings.
