

The Association of European Airlines to address key passenger rights issues in the European Parliament

European policy-makers and airlines are working together to ensure that air passengers are entitled to have the best services when it comes to cancellation, delays or other inconveniences. The revision of the current legislation is now timely to ensure that passenger rights are coherent and practical.

The European Commission's newly proposed measures to help air passengers obtain their rights in Europe are a step in the right direction, now it's the European Parliament's turn to voice its opinion.

Tomorrow, the Association of European Airlines (AEA) together with Member of the European Parliament (MEP), Georges Bach, will organise a luncheon debate where Members of the European Parliament and airlines can gather to exchange their views on this key regulation.
